Event description: “For over three decades, the annual Medicine Ways Conference has been hosted by the Native American Student Association and Native American Student Programs the the University of California, Riverside and has invited the campus community, students, staff, faculty and local community people to partake in this unique event. Each year the Native American Student Association, NASP, and the Rupert Costo Chair in Native American Studies work together to put on this wonderful event in which guest presentations and workshops are held according to the theme the conference focuses on each year. The theme this year is Relationships: Sustaining Unity in our Community. Several workshops will discuss the ways that people relate to the environment, to their community, to their families and to themselves. The main speakers will be discussing Native American conceptions of healthy relationships and wellness within differing contexts. In addition to the conference workshops will have main speakers speaking about establishing, maintaining and sustaining healthy relationships in their community. The costs associated with the event will be shared between NASP, and the Costo Chair in Native American Studies.”
